WATCH SOUTH CAROLINA

Cole L. Blease made his campaigns in South Carolina by appealing to the prejudices of men who are unable to reason clearly, though no one will deny that a good many honest men followed him loyally. Mr Blease was out for the votes, and it was easy for him to array one class of society against another. Tillman appealed to the one-gallus farmer in his notable campaigns, but Blease has gone Tillman several better. The senator, so far as we have been able to learn, never wanted any class discrim nated against economically and educationally. Mr. Blease made several grandstand plays during his two terms as governor. For one thing he sponsored a law denying white teachers the right of teaching in negro schools, gave their time and talents to the going so far, as any school boy knows, as to remove two Confederate commissioners from a British steamer; to declare in effect that commerce bound for Mexico and the West Indies had as its ultimate destination southern ports and to place hardships not only on the Confederacy, which was permissible, but to damage neutral nations.

In view of these facts, it is a considerable victory for the state department if the allied governments will hurry up their examination of neutral mails. Also in view of these facts is found a very good reason why the American public did not howl very loud over British and French violations of our rights.

A North Carolina boy, Ernest Shore of East Bend, materially assisted the Boston Americans in winning the bateball championship of the world. And yet when Shore groes to his home at East Bend, his old friends will gather about him and ask, "Well, Erny,, what have you been doing for yourself lately?" That's the trouble about it, Ernest said himself last year. Incidentally he let Brooklyn down with three hits and a single run in the last game.

Georgia Tech scored 222 runs against a team last Saturday, but a score of 30 points over Davidson this afternoon will place the crackers in the front rank of gridironers.
